Island – decorative islands in marble - New product from Eilersen

Eilersen kicks off 2017 by introducing a collection of three organic sofa tables, available in marble. A collection where both the tabletop and legs can be combined, and where the tables can be used either as nesting tables or individually, thanks to their different sizes.

Jens Juul Eilersen designed this new collection which he named Island, since the tables can be used as decorative islands amid soft décor.

Jens Juul Eilersen wanted to design a table without direction, so that it would not be reduced to a stationary element. Instead, it is a piece of furniture that can change location and expression, thanks in part to its three-legged design.

Oval triangles

Jens Juul Eilersen is known for his sense of proportions, and once again, he has leveraged this skill to produce beautiful lines. The Island tabletop is based on triangles, with flat circular arcs at the end, and finished with a steel border.

Island will be available in early 2017 at selected Eilersen distributors in Europe, America and Asia.
